Editors Disputch: Is the following exwhen used by one who is residing in Virginia, grammatically correct : "Since I have been in Virginia I have learned to think better of the Virginians?" If not please give the reason why, and oblige A SOUTHERNER

September 18, 1879.

ANSWER. A hard question. Chandler's gramma calls attention to the sentence, "I have been to Philadelphia," us a singular form of expression, and of at least doubtful accuracy. The verb "to be" is a principal verb as well as an auxiliary. In the sentences -Raquoted by our correspondents "have been is a principal verb, if the expression is correct. It is equivalent to "have lived" or "have been living." Thus, Paul says: " Must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him." The first "is" is a principal verb, and means "exists," or "lives," or "is living"-that is, "Must believe that He is steing, and is a rewarder," &c. So in our correspondents' sentences "have been may mean "have lived," and may therefore be constructively correct. But such sentences ought to be avoided in writing.

A Well-Timed Protest.

Editors Dispatch : Allow me to protest against your calling the opponents of the McCulloch bill Readjusters. The Conservative platform of August, 1877, suggested readjustment, and the people of Virginia elected a large majority of men in the fall of that year, pledged to endeavor to accomplish a readjustment of the public debt, so as to bring the demands to the State within her resources. In good faith men like Adams, Speaker Allen, Atkinson, Bernard, Brown, Dance, James, Ficklen, Goode, Henkel, Henson, James D. Johnston, Keyser, Kyle, McMullin, Popham, Trout, Walsh, and others of the General Assembly, all of whom voted for the Barbour bill, accepted read-Justment such as they had uniformly and persistently claimed when it was offered under the McCulloch bill, and voted for the principle which they held. Certainly those who refused to readjust cannot, with any propriety, be called Readjusters. Call them by some other name.

The apostle to the Gentiles, after his visit to Damascus, was called Paul. His life, purposes, and principles were changed, and he is no longer "Saul of Tarsus." I am a "Readjuster," not of the "Massey" stripe, but one who sustains and defends successful, accomplished, completed READJUSTMENT.

IMPORTANT NEW RAILROAD PROJECTED .-[Danville News, 19th.]-In an interview with President Barbour last night he informed us that the object of his coming here at this time is to inaugurate an effort looking to the extension of the Virginia Midland railroad beyond this city into North Carolina by way of the coalfields of Rockingham, and thence to Statesville, with purpose to form connection at that point with the line of railroad now being extended to Asheville, and thence to the great South. He brought with him an engineer and party to make a reconnoissance of the route of the proposed extension, in order to ascertain the probable cost of ners to be d the roc. This reconnoissance will be made forthwith, and the result speedily reported. President Barbour has just returned from

New York, where he has been in consultation with wealthy capitalists who are deeply interested in the proposed extension, and It is understood that they have determined to push the enterprise to a speedy success. -WHEAT TAKES A BIG JUMP .- Chicago
